Celebrate SepticSmart Week! September 16-20

SepticSmart Week – sponsored by the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) each September – focuses on educating homeowners and communities on the proper care and maintenance of their septic systems. When not properly maintained, septic systems pose a serious threat to water quality. ACCGOV Stormwater would like to remind homeowners to care for their systems by following these simple tips:

- Think at the sink – What goes down your drain has a big impact on your septic system. Avoid pouring harsh chemicals or grease down your drain and use cleaners/detergents in moderation.
- Don't strain your drain – Use water efficiently and stagger the use of water-based appliances such as washing machines, dishwashers, or showers to avoid back-up of your septic system.
- Keep it clean – Failing septic systems can contaminate groundwater, which in turn can affect our drinking water supply. If you are on a well system, test your water regularly.
- Shield your field – Drain fields are an important component of septic systems that remove contaminants from the liquid that emerges from the tank. Never park cars or plant trees on top of drain fields, and make sure roof drains and/or other drainage systems are directed away from it.
- Protect it and inspect it – Regular septic system maintenance can save homeowners thousands of dollars and protect public health. The average household septic system should be inspected and/or pumped every three to five years by a professional.

- Don't overload the commode – A toilet is not a trashcan. Disposable diapers and wipes, feminine hygiene products, cigarette butts, cat litter, and much more can damage your septic system.
